ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

CNHED is pleased to share the second edition of the Guide to Small Business Financing with the small business community. This comprehensive resource is intended to equip small businesses with knowledge and information about the lending process and help them access and compare loan financing options. The updates and enhancements to the guide were made possible by the insightful (instructive) feedback provided by local small business owners, lenders, and small business support organizations who participated in interviews and focus groups.

Special acknowledgments to Nicole Andonie, Economic Development Associate at CNHED, Solomon Broadnax, a former AmeriCorps VISTA, and Mereb Hagos for the instrumental role they played in gathering new data and updating the lender profiles featured in the guide, doing the tedious work of refreshing the guide, so the guide is a more informative and impactful resource for our community. We also want to thank Stacey Smith, The Smith Creative, for her design expertise in producing this polished document.

CNHED would also like to thank the Truist Charitable Fund for supporting this project to advance our small business ecosystem-building efforts in the District of Columbia.

About the Coalition for Nonprofit Housing and Economic Development

The Coalition for Nonprofit Housing and Economic Development (CNHED) is a dynamic 501(c)3 organization that advances equitable community economic development solutions in the District of Columbia. The organization's holistic systems-change approach encompasses community-informed budget and policy advocacy, data-driven thought leadership, and needs-based programmatic initiatives in Housing and Homelessness, Workforce Development, and Small and Minority-Owned Business Ecosystem Building.

Since its inception in 2000, CNHED has grown from 55 organizations to nearly 160 today. CNHED's strength is in its convening power, highly successful advocacy, robust communications, and information sharing, and equipping its members with tools and resources for their work. CNHED's organizational members include nonprofit and for-profit affordable housing developers, housing counseling and service agencies, community economic development organizations, workforce and business development entities, lenders, intermediaries, and government agencies. For more information, visit www.cnhed.org.

INTRODUCTION

CNHED created the Guide to Small Business Financing to help small business owners in Washington, DC navigate various local lenders (i.e., financial institutions, banks, CDFIs, MFIs) and loan products to find the best financing option for their business. This guide aims to consolidate the wealth of information on lenders and loan products available to support small businesses. In addition, the Guide to Small Business Financing provides tips to help small business owners research, compare, and apply for financial resources.

It also covers the importance of getting funding to operate and grow, and some of the challenges small businesses may face when applying for funding.

While the information contained in this work is helpful for all small business owners, it is specifically designed for first-time borrowers embarking on their search for debt financing.

The guide is suitable for someone familiar with good practices but may be challenging for new borrowers. It's advisable for readers to go through the document with a small business advisor or financial mentor to help guide them. To find assistance, check out the DC SmallBizHelp.com directory of providers.

CNHED's three-part Guide to Small Business Financing: Navigating Lending Options for Your Business covers the following information for small business owners:

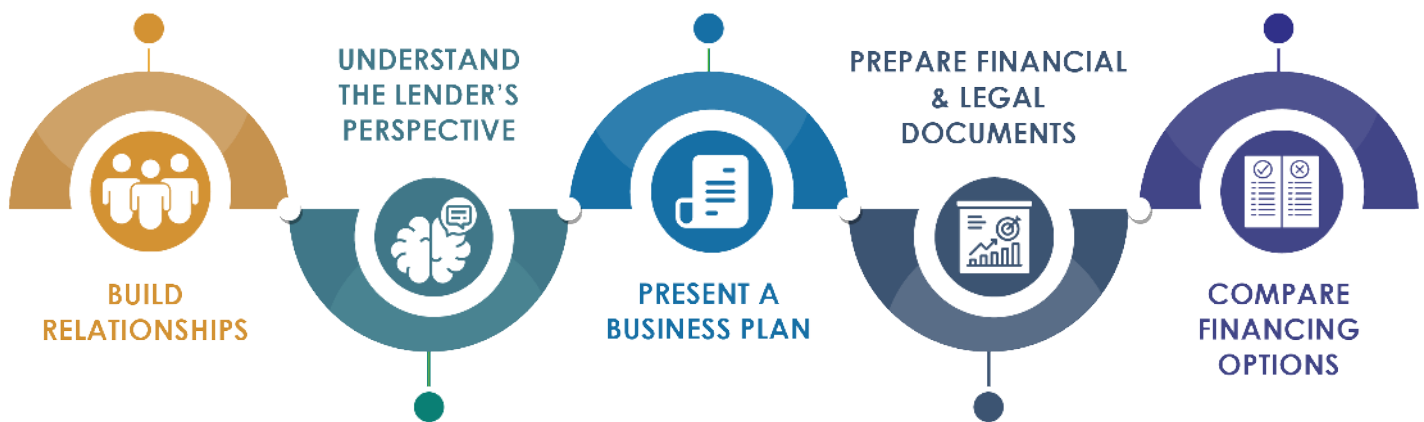

Additional guidance, including a select list of essential resources, links to free tools, training, and technical assistance, is available in the Appendix.

BORROWER PREPARATION

Financing a business is a journey. Business owners navigate from one waypoint to the next in search of the right lender¹ with the right financial product.² Although many business owners use a variety of sources for funding (e.g., equity, grants, sales revenue), this guide focuses on borrowing capital.

Part One of the guide highlights five key pit stops (or steps) for small business owners on the road to locating the right lender with the right financial product. Whether you're a business owner with a back-office support team, one who has successfully navigated a course on the business borrower's journey, or a new business owner who hasn't yet embarked on the path, reviewing the valuable content in this portion of the guide will ensure that you make informed choices that help you obtain the right financing for your business. Once you've developed a working knowledge of the key points, it's essential to regularly review each step and its associated materials.

1 A lender is an entity (i.e., Institution, group, or individual) that makes funds available to a borrower (i.e., business or person) with the expectation that the borrower will repay the funds, usually with interest and/or fees.

2 A financial product is an instrument—typically in the form of a contract—used to make investments, borrow, or save money. Financial products are provided to consumers and businesses by financial institutions.

Why Do Businesses Take Out Loans?

Businesses often turn to loans as a strategic financial tool to achieve various objectives crucial for growth and stability. Here are key reasons why businesses take out loans:

- 1. Expansion: Established businesses seek loans to finance expansion initiatives such as opening new locations, entering new markets, or scaling operations.
- 2. Cash Flow Management: Loans help businesses manage cash flow fluctuations, cover operating expenses during lean periods, or bridge gaps between receivables and payables.
- 3. Investment in Assets: Loans facilitate investments in equipment, machinery, technology upgrades, and infrastructure improvements that enhance productivity and competitiveness.
- 4. Inventory and Seasonal Needs: Retail and seasonal businesses use loans to purchase inventory, take advantage of bulk discounts, or prepare for peak demand periods.
- 5. Emergency Funds: Access to credit provides a financial safety net for unexpected expenses such as equipment repairs, regulatory compliance, or unforeseen economic downturns.
- 6. Building Credit History: Responsible borrowing and timely repayment of loans help businesses establish and strengthen their credit profile, enabling easier access to future financing options with favorable terms.

By leveraging loans strategically, businesses can seize growth opportunities, manage operational challenges, and navigate economic cycles effectively, ultimately fostering long-term success and sustainability.

Build Relationships

Relationships are essential for the success of any small business. When asked, the most commonly shared advice from lending officers³ to small business owners was to establish a relationship with a financial institution long before an urgent need for financing arises. This relationship is essential since lending is often conducted on a case-by-case basis.

By establishing a relationship early on, small business owners have an opportunity to provide additional background on their business and include a personal story about their situation and journey. The loan officer can then provide feedback and guidance on the most relevant financial products. Alternatively, the loan officer may refer the small business owner to a different lender if another institution seems to be a better fit.

Both lending officers and small business owners have a role to play in building a relationship. As a standard, lenders always conduct a thorough investigation of the small business owner and their business before establishing any lending agreement. Similarly, business owners should do their due diligence by researching, identifying, and establishing relationships with lenders that best suit their business needs.

Business owners should be familiar with the small business borrowers bill of rights and prepare a list of questions to ask lending officers. The example questions below provide insight into how lenders manage relationships with customers.⁴ One practical tip for business owners is to pay attention to a lending officer's business acumen. If a loan officer is reluctant, impatient, or unable to answer the outlined questions, this may indicate the nature of the relationship moving forward.

How are lending decisions made?

What impact do you have on the final decision?

Are loans serviced locally or sent to a centralized committee elsewhere?

Are you the primary lender. Do you keep the loan throughout the maturity?

Are multiple points of contact provided for times when the primary contact is unavailable?

Will the lender explain terminology that you don't understand?

Will the lender explain differences in their financial products and pricing?

What materials can the lender offer to help you understand their lending process?

⁴ For a more comprehensive list of questions to ask lenders in English and Spanish, click here.

It is vital to continue cultivating a relationship with a lending officer after initial financing. Short or small interactions such as keeping in touch with your lending officer by phone or email and proactively sharing news about your business winning an award, reaching a milestone, or launching a new service or product can go a long way in maintaining a relationship.

Other Important Relationships

Aside from lending officers and relevant financial institution staff, other individuals and organizations play an essential role in the growth and success of small businesses. Small business owners will need to interact with many of these organizations and individuals from the beginning. Building lasting relationships with these groups can provide invaluable guidance, mentoring, and services on the journey to business financing.

DC Government Agencies

DC government agencies provide services such as training, coaching, licensing, taxation, and government contracting. These agencies also offer grants and other financing programs. For a list of agencies, please see the Appendix.

Community Business Development Organizations

Like community development corporations, training service providers, and other nonprofit organizations, community business development organizations provide training, technical assistance, coaching, and mentorship.

Accounting Services

Accounting services provide expertise for preparing much of the documentation and paperwork required when seeking financing. Many small business owners are experts in their trade, selling products, and providing services but may not have expertise in financing and accounting. Identifying this type of back-office support is a critical decision. Paying for these services may be a necessary investment.

Legal Services

Legal services contribute expertise across a range of areas such as compliance, risk, liability, agreements, taxes, business formation, contracting, debt collection, lawsuits, acquisitions, and employee recruitment and management. Paying for legal services can be a necessary, business-saving investment.

Business Peers and Networks

Business peers and networks provide advice, support, and connections to additional resources and other businesses in your industry. Business owners can access even greater peer networks and resources through member-based organizations such as chambers of commerce and associations. Small business owners can also network and establish relationships with peers by attending small business events and connecting with business support organizations.

Investing time and effort into building relationships is an essential part of being a small business owner. Establishing a solid network is paramount to sustaining business longevity. Beyond peers and mentors, local business agencies, organizations, and financial institutions can offer guidance, feedback, and opportunities. The business relationships that small business owners foster can help with preparing subsequent materials outlined in this guide.

Understand the Lender's Perspective

Financial institutions have different missions, lending criteria, and financial products for small businesses. Regardless of the type of financial establishment, preparing to engage with any lender involves the same steps. Before lending to a small business, financial institutions conduct a complex risk analysis of the business and owner. Generally, risk assessments are completed on a case-by-case basis. During the risk analysis, most lenders reference the 5 C's of credit as a framework. Small business owners should be familiar with the 5 C's and use them to guide their financing preparation.

Character

Character is reflected by an applicant's personal and business credit history and credit score; it includes other factors like business reputation, willingness to share information, integrity, and trustworthiness.

Capacity

Capacity is based on income, financial obligations, ability to pay bills, a company's current debt (secured and unsecured), and a debt-to-income ratio (business and personal). All of these factors are assessed to determine the best financial product and determine if a borrower will have the cash flow to repay a loan.

Capital

Capital is reflected by the borrower's investment into their own business—this indicates the borrower's level of seriousness about their business and assesses whether they have contributed personal equity, thereby decreasing the chance of default. Some lenders view capital as a guarantee of assets or savings that the lender can claim in case of non-repayment.

Collateral

Collateral provides assurances to a lender. If a borrower defaults on a loan, a lender can repossess collateral (i.e., savings accounts, other financial assets, real estate, or inventory) to cover the loan; this reduces the lender's risk. Although all lenders may not view collateral the same, they will likely ask whether a business owner has collateral to secure a loan.

Conditions

Conditions include measures like the state of the business, industry, and economy—all factors that could affect a business's success. In addition to understanding these conditions, lenders need to know how an owner intends to use the loan, the amount requested, and current market interest rates.

The Importance of Personal Credit

When preparing financial and legal documents for your business, it's essential to understand the critical role personal credit plays in the overall financial health and viability of your enterprise. Here's why:

The Link Between Personal and Business Credit

Personal credit and business credit are often interconnected, particularly for small business owners and startups. Lenders frequently review personal credit reports to assess the financial habits and risk levels of the business owner. Your personal credit score can influence the terms and availability of business loans, credit lines, and even vendor agreements. A strong personal credit history can pave the way for better financing options, while a poor credit history can limit your choices and increase borrowing costs.

Reflective of Money Habits and Debt Comfort Level

Personal credit scores are reflective of your money habits, behaviors, and comfort level with debt. They provide a snapshot of how you manage your finances, including your ability to pay bills on time, your total debt burden, and your track record with various types of credit. Lenders see these factors as indicators of how you might handle business finances. Good personal credit suggests reliability and financial responsibility, making you a more attractive candidate for business credit.

Impact of Credit Aversion

For those who are risk-averse and prefer not to have credit, it's important to understand the implications of not having a credit history. While avoiding debt might seem like a safe financial practice, it can actually hinder your ability to secure loans for your business. Lenders need to see a history of credit usage to evaluate your creditworthiness. Without a credit history, they have no way to gauge your reliability in repaying borrowed funds, which can result in higher interest rates or outright denial of credit applications.

In conclusion, maintaining good personal credit is not only beneficial for your personal financial health but also crucial for the success and growth of your business. By demonstrating responsible credit use, you can build a solid foundation for accessing the financial resources your business needs to thrive.

Present a Business Plan

Small business owners should be able to tell their company's story—where it began, where it has been, and where it is going. When starting a new business, a business plan is vital. It is a dynamic document that will evolve; it serves as a framework and a road map for your business as it progresses through the stages of growth, noting and forecasting varying financial requirements over time. A well-crafted business plan is essential for guiding your business strategy, securing funding, and setting a clear path to success. If you are an existing business, make sure to revise and update your business plan to reflect your current operations and goals. This ensures that your business plan remains a useful and accurate tool for guiding your strategy and decision-making processes.

Business plans are also an essential tool for explaining your story to potential investors and lenders. When lenders review your plan, they will look for a solid business idea, a successful track record, and long-term sustainability and growth potential. The plan demonstrates that investing in your business is a wise decision.

Lenders need to understand each business to assess and mitigate their investment risks. A business plan helps them determine if the business aligns with their lending mission and identify the most suitable financial product. There are many business plan templates available and the majority include the following elements:

1. Executive summary
2. Company description (i.e., legal form, origination, location, and size)
3. Business leadership, organization, and management team (including the background and experience of the founders)
4. Products and services description
5. Market, sector, and competition analysis
6. Distribution and marketing plan
7. Goals and strategies for implementation and operating plans
8. Financial plan and projections; this includes projected income, expenses, and growth for the life of a loan. (This section is significant as it outlines the need for financing and provides an idea of how a business owner will use the funds)

Business owners can download free and moderately priced templates online. A great option is the SCORE Business Plan template

Prepare Financial & Legal Documents

Small business owners are often required to obtain and complete a significant amount of paperwork to access financing from any lender, including legal and financial documents. Business financials are necessary documents for managing a business and also serve as critical documents that lenders require to assess risks and analyze lending decisions for small business loans.

Additionally, personal financial documentation from the business owner may be required by lenders for a small business loan. Many of these documents are submitted with a loan application. The lender uses these records as a tool to evaluate the 5 C's of credit.

When engaging lenders, small business owners should have the following information outlined below prepared. Even if owners have financial accounting and business management experts who can help prepare these documents quickly, it's essential to be familiar with the business's current status. Owners should be ready to share these documents and information along with any loan application:

Background Checks

Most lenders conduct verifications and/or background checks during their underwriting process,¹ looking at items such as:

- Tax liens on personal and business property, equipment, and vehicles
- Foreclosure history
- Bankruptcy history
- Fraud history
- Owner's immigration status
- Child support payment status
- Criminal records
- Terrorist financing history

LEGAL DOCUMENTS

There are a variety of legal documents that prove the legality of the business and its operational status such as articles of incorporation, business licenses, commercial leases, franchise agreements, and partnership agreements.

BANK STATEMENTS & TRANSACTIONS

It's important to open a separate business bank account and keep personal and business financials separate. Bank account statements are typically required as part of a loan application. Transactions in checking and savings accounts have an impact on taxes, loan approval, and business cash positions. Opening a business bank account can also be a pathway to establishing a relationship with a financial institution.

¹ Underwriting is when the lender reviews the application and is often done by a credit committee to determine the risks and benefits of lending to an applicant.

Although the following documents are not always required for submission as part of a loan application, lenders typically verify them as part of their underwriting process, and small business owners should be fully informed and aware of these and be prepared to explain any issues:

Lenders usually check personal and business credit scores to determine interest rates and assess the risk of a borrower's ability to make on-time payments. Small business owners should be aware of both scores. By checking credit score reports for accuracy beforehand, you can prepare to explain historical delinquencies or discrepancies. Credit scores change frequently, and different reporting agencies⁵ may report different scores; therefore, it's critical to monitor all credit scores regularly. Correcting inaccurate transactions on a credit report requires time. If your credit score needs improvement, it may be helpful to seek assistance from small business development and support organizations⁶ that offer credit building advice and loans.

The federal government requires every business with employees to have workers' compensation, unemployment, and disability insurance. In some instances, small businesses may be legally required to purchase certain types of business insurance. For example, Certified Business Enterprises (CBEs) seeking financing to fulfill services related to government procurement contracts may be required to have business insurance⁷ that a lender can verify.

Creditors can establish various lien⁸ types against a business owner's personal and business assets or property. Small business owners should be aware of any liens on their assets from existing financing arrangements. A borrower may unknowingly have a lien on their credit report. One way to check for liens is by accessing your reports from the three major credit reporting agencies (though credit reports may not always be accurate). Alternatively, a Uniform Commercial Code (UCC) check, which lenders may complete through a paid service, can reveal the presence of liens. Lenders routinely check for liens, consider them in a loan analysis, and place a new lien on business assets as a lending requirement.

⁵ USA.gov provides information on credit reports and scores of the three main credit reporting agencies: Equifax, Experian, and Transunion.

⁶ Credit Builders Alliance offers a list of business development and support organizations.

⁷ US Small Business Administration, Get Business Insurance (August 2021)

⁸ Liens are a creditor's legal claim to the collateral pledged as security for a loan. Various liens can be established, including those issued by a creditor, as a legal judgment, or by a tax authority.

Both personal and business taxes will be assessed as part of the loan application. Ensure business taxes are set up correctly from the beginning and tax obligations are met. Small businesses determine their potential tax burden during the formation of the business structure,⁹ and it is vital to maximize deductions and minimize tax due (i.e., tax liabilities). When deciding how to correctly structure the business, it's worthwhile to seek expert advice upfront from the Small Business Development Center \(SBDC\), Service Corps of Retired Executives \(SCORE\), attorneys, and/or accountants. To remain in good legal standing, the business must meet federal, state, and local tax obligations.

In Washington, DC, a Certificate of Clean Hands verifying that neither you nor your business owe DC government money is essential for accessing District funding programs. Local lenders may check your business's status when you apply for a financial product. For this reason, it is critical that you have a repayment schedule in place for any taxes due. Business owners should negotiate a schedule that is realistic and feasible for them.

A business's primary financial documents include a balance sheet, an income statement (i.e., profit/loss statement or P&L), and a cash flow report. Since the three primary financial documents are vital to business operations, business owners should understand them—even if an accountant or bookkeeper has helped prepare them. Together, the three documents provide a comprehensive depiction of a business's operating activities and financial position. Lenders use data from the reports to calculate important financial ratios that provide insight into a business's financial performance and evaluate the business's risk and capacity to repay a loan.

Small business owners may be required to submit additional paperwork such as other existing loan agreements, debt schedule, accounts receivable aging summary, and lease agreements.

Additional resources related to this topic are located in the Appendix.

⁹ The business structure is the established form of a business entity, such as a sole proprietorship, partnership, limited liability company (LLC), C corporation, S corporation, B corporation, or nonprofit corporation. For guidance see SBA Choosing a Business Structure.

Borrower Checklist

Applying for a small business loan can indeed be both exciting and challenging. To help you navigate the process, here's a checklist of documents you will need to prepare to ensure a smoother application.

- Last two years of business and personal taxes, federal only*
- Year-to-date profit and loss statement for your business*
- Collateral document that describes the value of personal / business assets*
- Proof of business insurance*

Compare Financing Options

Small business owners should select a lender by matching the business's financing needs and capacity with the lender's capabilities and mission. When considering a lender, it's crucial to consider branch locality, availability of bank representatives, and the financial institution's service variety. Other key factors contributing to the lender selection process include the business type, status, financing requirements, and an individual's desired level of advice and guidance.

Types of Lenders¹⁰

Many different types of lenders service small businesses. As a small business owner, you should explore various potential lenders on your journey to determine their lending products, pricing, eligibility requirements, and mission.

Part Two: Lenders Snapshot of the Guide to Small Business Financing is a useful reference for starting your research; however, the information presented is not a comprehensive list of all lenders. The snapshot includes banks, community, national, regional, and commercial banks, lenders that service Community Development Finance Institutions (CDFIs), a microfinance institution (MFI), U.S. Small Business Administration (SBA) lending, and a crowdfunding lender.

Part Three: Lenders Directory of the guide provides further information about each lender's products, pricing, eligibility requirements, and unique mission for small business lending.

Banks

Banks are financial institutions licensed to receive deposits and make loans. Community, regional, and national banks participate in small business lending and each has different characteristics in terms of market focus, mission, size of assets, number of branches, menu of financial services, organizational structure, loan authorizing structures, and lending policies.

CDFIs

Community Development Financial Institutions (CDFIs) are private financial institutions that help disenfranchised groups join the economic mainstream by providing responsible and affordable lending to low-income, low-wealth, and other disadvantaged groups. CDFIs finance community businesses in hard to serve markets, including small businesses, microenterprises, commercial real estate, nonprofit organizations, and affordable housing. While CDFIs are profitable, they are not profit-maximizing. They put community first, not shareholders.

¹⁰ For more detailed descriptions of lender types visit Venturize Understanding Financing Sources.

MFI

Microfinance Institutions (MFIs) provide financial services to low-income individuals or groups who are typically excluded from traditional banking. MFIs offer small or micro-loans ranging from $500 up to $100,000, and may offer other financial services including savings, micro-insurances, and remittances.

Credit Unions

Credit Unions are not-for-profit, cooperative financial institutions owned and run by its members. The general premise of the credit union business model involves members pooling money to provide loans, demand deposit accounts (DDAs), and other financial products and services to credit union members.

Fintech

Fintech (financial technology) lenders integrate technology (i.e., software and applications) in lending to automate the delivery of financial services, often using algorithms to facilitate the process. The two most common Fintech lending types are:

Debt Crowdfunding

Facilitated by an online platform, debt crowdfunding (also known as peer-to-peer or P2P lending) allows the public to lend money to businesses or individuals. The borrower applies, gets financed, and repays the loan through the platform. In turn, the crowdfunding site distributes the repaid funds back to the persons who loaned the money. Some P2P lending websites match borrowers with investors who lend money to qualifying candidates for a return on investment. These platforms are regulated and managed by both for-profit and not-for-profit entities.

Online Loan Marketplaces

Created by non-bank financial institutions or third parties (sometimes endorsed by bank partnerships), online marketplaces connect investors and businesses through their online platforms. Online loan markets use algorithms to link borrowers and investors, determine applicants' creditworthiness, assign each application a grade, and determine interest rates based on the marketplace lending company's proprietary credit scoring tool. The application information required by marketplace lending is more extensive than that of crowdfunding sites.

Word of Caution!

When considering financing options, it's important to be aware of potential pitfalls and to protect your business interests. Here are some key points to keep in mind:

- Carefully review all loan terms and conditions to avoid hidden fees or unfavorable terms.
- Make sure you understand the total cost of borrowing, including interest rates and repayment schedules.
- Be cautious of lenders who promise quick approval without detailed financial information.
- Refer to the Small Business Borrower's Bill of Rights to ensure you are being treated fairly.

Key Rights to Remember:

The Right to Fair and Transparent Lending: Ensure all loan terms are clear and straightforward.

The Right to Support and Resources: Access government and community resources designed to help your business grow and succeed.

The Right to Fair Tax Treatment: Benefit from a fair and equitable tax system that supports your business development.

Family & Friends

Borrowing from family and friends is an option. It is prudent to create a written agreement to safeguard individual investments and set a schedule for repayment.

Angel Investors

Typically, an angel investor is a wealthy individual that invests in early-stage businesses and startups. They may be interested in a high rate of return, motivated by a desire to support startups, or provide aid to specific entrepreneurs. Angel investors often provide funds in return for an equity stake or debt that converts to equity.

Be careful of cold calls from potential lenders that may have discovered your business through the DC Business Center or other directories, and make sure they are legitimate before sharing any private information with them.

The US Small Business Administration (SBA) advises that small business owners protect themselves from predatory lenders by looking for warning signs. Some predatory lenders impose unfair and abusive terms on borrowers through deception and coercion:

Interest Rates

Beware of rates that are significantly higher than competitors', or fees that are greater than 5% of the loan value.

Fraudulent Practices

A lender should never ask you to lie on paperwork or leave signature boxes blank.

APR & Payment Schedule

Make sure the lender discloses the annual percentage rate (APR) and full payment schedule.

Harassment

Do not feel pressured into taking a loan.

As a well-informed small business owner, you should survey competing offers and consult a financial planner, accountant, or attorney before signing your next loan.

Types of Financial Products

Just as multiple lenders exist for small businesses, various loan types and financial products exist, too. To determine the best financial products, small business owners need to define a few things—like how much financing is required, the purpose of the funds, the best options for funding based on intended use, and the time frame expected for disbursement and re-payment (e.g., short, intermediate, or long-term).

Lenders can advise small business owners about the most relevant financial products after learning about a business's existing financial position and income streams (i.e., equity contributed by the owner, available collateral, existing debt, savings, revenue from sales, and upcoming contracts). Before working with a lending officer to determine the most appropriate financial product, small business owners should prepare to answer the following questions:

How much money is needed?

How will the business use the money?

How will the money be repaid?

What will happen if the business owner unable to repay the loan?

When evaluating financial products, small business owners should determine the total payback amount, including the interest expense, various fees (e.g., loan fees, origination fees), and the annual percentage rate (APR). By law, lenders must disclose APRs.

APRs are frequently used to compare loan products within and across financial organizations (factor rates are used in some types of financing). However, the APR alone will not provide a complete picture of borrowed capital. Consumers should be aware that other loan terms impact the entire cost of financing. Fortunately, there are tools online, like the online loan calculators provided by many banks, that can assist with estimating the overall costs of borrowing. Another key consideration is whether a specific financial product requires collateral and what type.

The Small Business Administration (SBA) has programs that provide guarantees to lenders to reduce their risk, enabling credit-worthy startups and existing small businesses to access short- and long-term loans. SBA programs were designed to decrease lending institutions' risk and allow business owners who might not otherwise be qualified to receive debt financing. The agency doesn't lend money directly to small business owners; instead, it sets guidelines for loans made by partnering lenders, like banks, CDFIs, and micro-lending institutions. SBA lenders are listed in the Lender Snapshot and Lender Profile Directory of this guide.

Small business owners are generally required to provide collateral for secured loans and lines of credit as assurance in case they are unable to make payments, enabling the lender to gain ownership of the collateral.

DC government has a program that may help small business owners that don't have sufficient collateral.

DC BizCAP Collateral Support Program provides funds for deposit with a specific lender (e.g., bank, credit union, or CDFI) to provide the necessary collateral to cover a borrower's shortfall.

Examples of collateral include real estate (both residential and commercial), vehicles, equipment, and inventory. Lenders will ensure that you own these assets before considering them collateral. The value of collateral will likely be equal to the amount of the loan or line of credit, so it's important to maintain detailed records of the assets' value.

Secured loans backed by collateral may offer better payment terms and lower interest rates. However, there is a risk of loss of assets in case of default, so it's critical to consider the implications and may be a good idea to first seek advice from a financial advisor prior to putting up important collateral, such as a home. Lenders may also require a personal guarantee from the business owner and any co-applicants or guarantors. This means you, and perhaps cooperating partners, friends, or family who secure the loan with you, will need to pledge personal assets as collateral in the event you are unable to repay the loan.

Microloans are small loans up to $50,000.

Use case example: Microloans are typically used for working capital, inventory, supplies, furniture, fixtures, and machinery.

Term Loans are loans in the form of a lump sum or fixed amount upfront. The loan is repaid using a fixed repayment schedule with either a fixed or variable interest rate and a set maturity date. Term loans can be secured or unsecured. A secured loan is backed by collateral (e.g., property, equipment, or other business assets of value). Secured loans typically have lower interest rates than unsecured loans. If a borrower defaults on a secured loan, the lender can seize property to recover the loss.

Use case example: If the need to finance a specific, one-time expense arises, then a term loan is the best option. Depending on the lender, a small business may use cash from a term loan for various reasons such as capital improvements, purchasing fixed assets or equipment, hiring staff, or setting up a new building for production.

LINE OF CREDIT (LOC)

Lines of Credit (LOC) are preset limits on borrowing that borrowers can tap into until the limit is reached. In the case of an open LOC, as money is repaid, it can be borrowed again. Typically, interest is paid on the balance while the line is open, which makes it different from a conventional loan that is repaid in fixed installments. Some LOCs use checks (called drafts) to withdraw funds, while others include a type of credit or debit card. LOCs are flexible. Borrowers can request a certain amount, but do not have to use it all, and only owe interest on the amount they draw and use. Repayment is also flexible. For example, the entire outstanding balance can be repaid all at once or with minimum monthly payments. Different types of LOCs offer different interest rates and time limits (e.g., secured, unsecured, HELOCs, short-term).

Use case example: If funds are needed to cover ongoing operating expenses or to have a reserve for emergencies, then a line of credit is a good option. This short-term funding may be used to support operational expenses like payroll, purchasing supplies, or increasing inventory. However, borrower discipline is critical as LOCs can invite overspending, and misuse could impact credit scores.

BUSINESS CREDIT CARDS

Business Credit Cards are a convenient and flexible financing tool. Instead of using personal credit cards, business credit cards help keep business and personal expenses separate for bookkeeping and tax purposes. Many business credit cards report transaction history to business credit bureaus instead of the personal credit bureaus; this is critical to understanding how to build credit for your business while protecting your non-business credit score. It's important to note, the same consumer protections on consumer credit cards may not always apply to business credit cards, so you must read the fine print. Finally, borrowers should be mindful of their credit use as the interest accrued increases based on the carrying balance, impacting the credit utilization ratio.¹¹

Use case example: Business credit cards are helpful in many ways. They may assist with reporting, expense tracking, and record-keeping. Business credit cards also make it possible to issue multiple cards to employees on the same account. Business credit cards may offer more flexible payment options, higher credit limits, and rewards or other perks compared to personal credit cards. There are some things business owners may not use for a business credit card, such as paying a property lease, payroll, or invoices from certain vendors. Like LOCs, borrower discipline is critical as business credit cards can invite overspending, and misuse could impact credit scores.

Additional resources related to this topic are located in the Appendix.

¹¹ The credit utilization ratio is the percentage of a borrower's total utilized credit compared to the borrower's total approved credit, including lines of credit or credit cards—the ratio changes with payments and purchases. Credit reporting agencies use the ratio to calculate a credit score. Higher ratios reflect poorly.

SUMMARY

As described in the introduction, this guide is a concise road map outlining strategies to prepare for the journey to obtaining financing for your small business. CNHED hopes the guidance has helped small business owners see the path forward, comprehend fundamental needs and finance requirements, find strategies to traverse from one point to another, and identify potential hurdles. When seeking funding strategically, small business owners must consider a wide range of possibilities and choices. Regular use of this valuable resource will help you plan and make well-informed decisions on the road to funding.

There are several resources accessible online that go further into the subjects covered in this booklet. CNHED encourages small business owners to conduct additional research, attend training courses, webinars, and network with mentors and peers. The Appendix offers links to material that will be useful throughout your business financing journey.

GLOSSARY

Annual Percentage Rate (APR)

APR represents the yearly cost of a loan, including interest and fees. The total interest amount to be paid is based on the original loan amount (i.e., principal) and represented in percentage form. It is useful to compare different financial products; however, a word of caution: APRs may not be perfectly comparable because lenders can choose what charges to include in their rate calculation.

Credit Report

A credit report is a personal report made by one of the three major credit reporting agencies (i.e., Equifax, Experian, and Transunion), giving your credit history. It typically states if you have any delinquent payments, failure to pay, as well as any bankruptcies, foreclosures, or other legal proceedings. Your credit report typically includes a FICO score.

Credit Utilization Ratio

The credit utilization ratio shows the percentage of a borrower's total utilized credit compared to the total credit for which they were approved, including lines of credit and/or credit cards. Credit utilization ratios change with payments and purchases and are a factor used by credit reporting agencies to calculate a credit score—higher ratios reflect poorly, while lower ratios are favorable.

Debt Service Coverage Ratio

Lenders use the debt service coverage ratio as a key indicator to measure a borrower's ability to repay a loan by looking at the amount of available cash that a borrower can use to repay the loan. Debt service calculation ratios are determined using the following formula:

$$\text{NET OPERATING INCOME} \div \text{TOTAL DEBT SERVICE (I.E., PRINCIPAL} + \text{INTEREST PAYMENTS TO BE PAID)}$$

Debt-to-Equity Ratio

The debt-to-equity ratio is used to determine whether a business has enough assets to cover a loan in case of default. Typically, lenders want businesses to have more assets than debts.

Factor Rates

A factor rate is a cost that needs to be repaid on a financial product and is comparable to a flat fee imposed on borrowed funds. Factor rates are expressed as a decimal figure (ranging from 1.1–1.9). The rate is calculated at the start of a lending period and is not adjusted during the life of the loan. Factor rates are more commonly associated with short-term financing products such as working capital advances, accounts receivable financing, and merchant cash advances. Because factor rate financing is often used with short-term funding options, most lenders require a daily or weekly repayment instead of a monthly repayment schedule.

Home Equity Line of Credit (HELOC)

A HELOC is the most common type of secured lines of credit. HELOCs are secured by the market value of a home minus the amount owed on it, which becomes the basis for determining the size of the line of credit. Typically, the credit limit is ranges between 75% – 80% of the market value of the home, minus the balance owed on the mortgage.

Invoice Factoring

Also known as accounts receivables factoring, invoice factoring is when a business sells its unpaid invoices to a third party (i.e., a factor or factoring company) at a discount. Essentially, the factoring company purchases the outstanding invoices and takes over collections. The factor gives an upfront payment that is typically 85% – 95% of the invoice total. The factor then proceeds with collecting payments, and once the customer has paid the invoice, the factor pays the remaining balance back to the business, less an agreed-upon fee. Note: factoring may not make sense if a business owner has good credit, a low debt-to-income ratio, and doesn't need the cash within a week. In this case, a long-term business loan or line of credit would be a better fit because the effective interest rate will be much lower.

Invoice Financing

Invoice financing is a loan from a bank that's based on the value of outstanding invoices. Loan repayments are made like any other loan, and the business still collects payments from customers per usual (i.e., retaining complete control of collections). Invoice financing is best used when a company needs cash to fund inventory purchases or payroll and has invoices due in less than 90 days from customers with good credit. While the money from the invoices will come eventually, slow-paying customers or extended repayment terms could negatively impact incoming cash flow. Lenders consider how long it takes a business to collect on its accounts receivable and whether customers are paying to assess the risk of extending an invoice financing loan to a company.

Lien

A lien is a creditor's legal claim to the collateral pledged as security for a loan. If the loan is not repaid, the creditor may be able to seize the asset that is the subject of the lien. Various types of liens can be established including by a creditor, legal judgment, or tax authority.

Loan-to-Value (LTV) Ratio

A loan-to-value ratio compares the fair-market value of an asset to the amount of the loan that will fund it. This is important for lenders who need to know if the value of the asset will cover the loan repayment if a business defaults and fails to pay. LTV can play a substantial role in the interest rate that a borrower can secure.

Merchant Cash Advance (MCA)

Merchant cash advances involve the sale of future receivables for a set dollar amount and are repaid with a percentage of a business's daily sales receipts. Depending on repayment speed, equivalent APRs may exceed 80% or even rise to triple digits. For example, $50,000 may be granted in exchange for $65,000 in future receipts. In this example, the repayment amount is collected via automatic draws of 10% on daily credit card sales. Note: MCAs are generally repaid within 3–18 months.

Secured Loans

Secured loans use tangible assets as collateral. Secured credit refers to loans your business can qualify for by promising collateral, like equipment or real estate. If you default on a secured loan, the collateral and other property can be seized by the lender to satisfy any part of the loan that has not been paid. Loans can also be secured by the lenders applying a blanket lien on your business.

Truth in Lending Act (TILA)

Implemented by the Federal Reserve Board through a series of regulations, the Truth in Lending Act is a federal law enacted in 1968 to help protect consumers in their dealings with lenders and creditors. TILA requires disclosure of certain information to a borrower before extending credit, such as the APR, terms of the loan, and total costs to the borrower. This information must be conspicuous on documents presented to the borrower before signing.

Underwriting

Underwriting is the process through which a lender decides to take on the financial risk of a borrower in exchange for a fee. Using a mix of automation and human expertise, underwriting involves assessing the degree of risk by evaluating a potential borrower's credit history, financial records, and the value of any collateral offered. Other factors may be considered is a risk analysis depending on the size and purpose of the loan.

Unsecured Loans

Unsecured loans do not require any form of collateral. Lenders grant unsecured loans based on a borrower's creditworthiness rather than a borrower's assets.
